NORTHAMPTON, MASS. Clarke Library and Unitarian Church.

I forgot to tell you that my chrysanthemums are still perfect!
It has not yet come! I have something to bless Dad for when I write! Tell [illegible] to see Rings tonight
That was such a splendid long letter I received from you this morning. I did not realize I had not written for long. I have the Agnes Irwin Alumnae receipt. You of course answered [illegible] question on this morning's postal about the box. Love to Mrs. Brakeley.

THE ADDRESS TO BE WRITTEN ON THIS SIDE

CLARKE LIBRARY AND UNITARIAN CHURCH. The Memorial Hall and Public Library building is now generally spoken of as the Clarke Library in honor of John Clarke, who bequested $ 40,000 to the city for library purposes, and who also founded the Clarke School for the Deaf on Round Hill. The library is in the rear of the Hall, which is a memorial of the Civil War. The Unitarian Church adjoins this building.
